NEWS FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Mark Worster, President of Unitel, Presented on the Future of Business Communications at the International Tenant Representative Alliance's Annual Conference

BOSTON, MA — DATE — Unitel, an industry leader in unified communications, announced today that the company's president, Mark Worster, presented to the International Tenant Representative Alliance (ITRA) on the latest advancements in Voice over IP (VoIP) and the future of business communications. The presentation to the group's distinguished audience took place during their 2009 ITRA International Conference in Boston on October 3. The conference was attended by 50 of the top commercial tenant representatives from around the world.

Mr. Worster began his presentation by providing the audience with a background on VoIP and its powerful applications. He discussed the advantages of both hosted and onsite VoIP systems, the functionality and flexibility of unified communications, and the technology's unique ability to seamlessly connect multi-locations and tele-workers together. Mr. Worster also illustrated the challenges that companies face when implementing VoIP, such as quality of service, partnering with an inexperienced technology provider, insufficient network assessments, and lack of infrastructure to properly support the technology.

Mr. Worster ended his informative speech on what's in store for businesses from the next wave of communications technology. He excited the crowd by introducing them to fixed mobile convergence (FMC), where the objective is to provide both services through a single phone and can switch between networks instantly. In this situation a company's mobile terminal will be able to support both wide-area (cellular) access and local-area technology (for VoIP). An alternative approach achieves FMC over 3G and 4G mobile networks.

“It was an absolute thrill and privilege to share my views of VoIP and communications technology to the most sophisticated group of tenant representatives,” commented Mr. Worster. “Technology is changing so rapidly that it’s difficult to keep up unless you’re on top of it everyday. This is our core competency as a business and the value we provide to ITRA members. With the information provided, these individuals will be able to better support their customers on the new way companies will communicate in the not too distant future.”
